WHO WE ARE

The Asian Pacific American Medical Student Association's (APAMSA) annual National Conference celebrates Asian, Native Hawaiian, and Pacific Islander heritage and focuses on health challenges related to AANHPI communities. Our UNLV Kirk Kerkorian School of Medicine chapter is a pan-Asian American student-run medical student organization that will be hosting the biggest AANHPI medical conference in the United States.

2024 NATIONAL CONFERENCE

OUR OBJECTIVE

Blooming in the Desert: Resilience, Adaptation, Growth

In recent years, APAMSA National Conference themes have centered around boldly imagining the future and thoughtfully examining the past in order to bring our community together around the common goal of addressing healthcare disparities. Now we ask: How do we sustainably solve these challenges by employing the strengths that already exist within our communities and unify these efforts? “Blooming in the Desert: Resilience, Adaptation, and Growth” is about mobilizing existing activism and local stakeholders to collaboratively and creatively meet these goals amid both seasons of monsoons and droughts. This theme is rooted in our chapter’s unique experience as a group of medical students at a young but eager university that was established to serve a rapidly growing city with ever changing needs. As we continue to learn how to “bloom” in these early stages to serve our own community, we recognize that countless communities across the country are doing the same. 2024 APAMSA National Conference is an opportunity for us to learn from each others’ experiences to shape AANHPI health across the country.

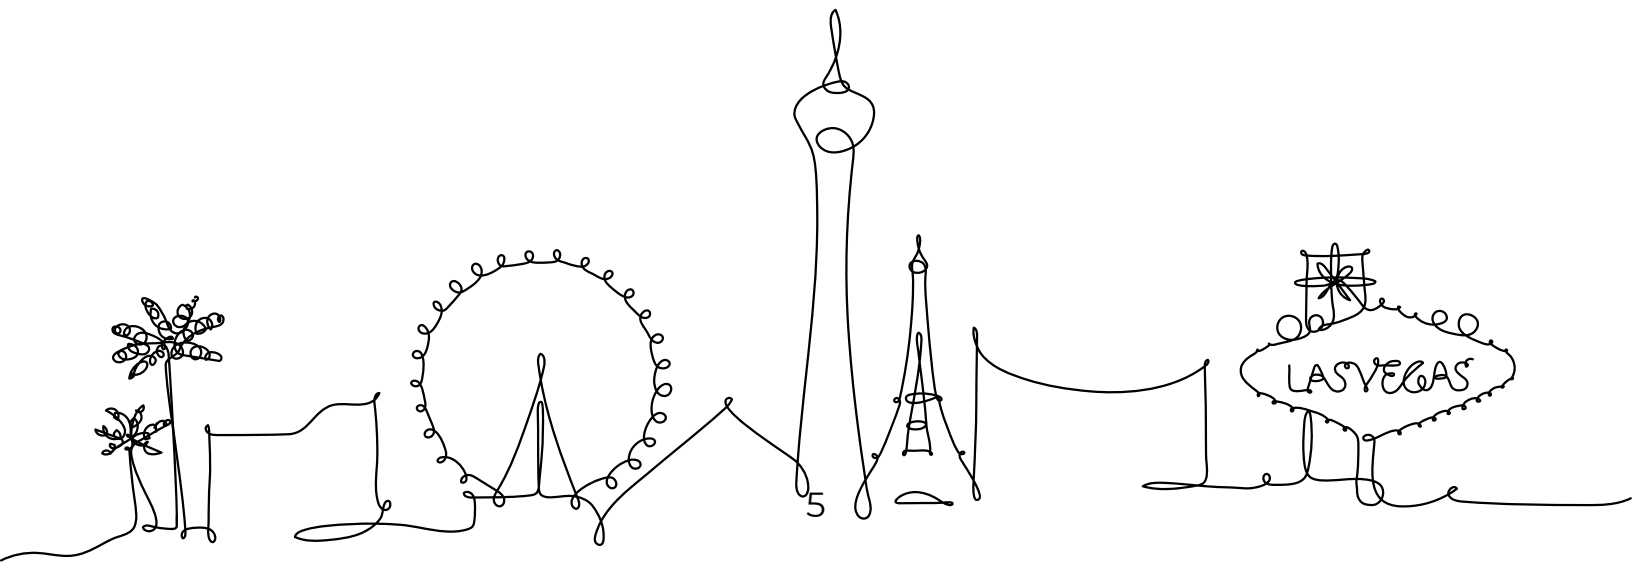

2024 NATIONAL CONFERENCE

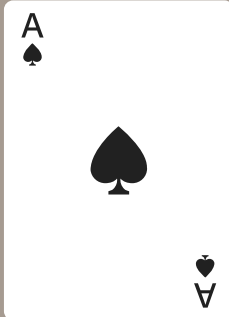

Programming

Each year, our conference brings together hundreds of AANHPI medical students, alumni, and premedical students.

Programming highlights include a diverse group of speakers, a research poster session, workshops for practical clinical and interview skills, and networking opportunities for current and future physicians from across the country.
